

Robert loved the water, so it's no surprise he picked a career where he got to be submerged beneath the waves. He joined the Navy in 1970 and spent a large part of his Naval career on nuclear submarines. He was the commanding officer of USS James Madison, USS Kentucky, and the Naval Weapons Station in Charleston, SC, from where he retired in 2000. His Naval career took him all over the world - some places he could tell us about (like when he bought us all matching pirate shirts in Barbados) and some he couldn't share as he protected our country.

Commemorate Robert's aquatic adventures with a refreshing bottle of water.
